OIL PIPELINE TARIFF FILING

Honorable Kimberly D. Bose, Secretary
Federal Energy Regulatory Commission
888 1st Street N.E., Room 1-A
Washington, D.C. 20426

Dear Ms. Bose:

Alpine Transportation Company (“Alpine”) sends the following schedules to be effective January 1, 2023, in compliance with the Interstate Commerce Act and the rules and regulations of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (“FERC”).

Tariff Number:

F.E.R.C. No. 17.13.0 (cancels F.E.R.C. No. 17.12.0)

Effective Date:

January 1, 2023

This tariff is issued to revise Alpine’s rates, effective January 1, 2023, pursuant to the Alpine Settlement Agreement, which was filed with FERC on July 27, 2001, in Docket No. IS01-33-000, and approved by the Commission on October 25, 2001. See Alpine Transportation Company, 97 FERC ¶ 61,087 (2001).

The Alpine Settlement Agreement requires Alpine to file by December 1 of each year new interstate rates that are no higher than the applicable maximum rate for interstate transportation under the Alpine Settlement Methodology (“ASM”). The ASM is a cost-based rate methodology that establishes rate ceilings based on estimates of pipeline costs and throughput subject to true-up to actual costs and throughput levels in future rates once the actual values are known using a “Net Carryover” mechanism. The specific calculations required by the ASM are set forth in the Alpine Settlement Agreement that was filed on July 27, 2001, in FERC Docket No. IS01-33-000.

The proposed rates for 2023 reflect an increase from $0.61 per barrel to $0.84 per barrel for transportation from the Colville Alaska Alpine Field to the Kuparuk River Unit and an increase from $0.18 per barrel to $0.25 per barrel for transportation from the Southern Miluveach Unit to the Kuparuk River Unit. The proposed rates were calculated in accordance with the ASM set forth in the Alpine Settlement Agreement. The primary reason for the rate increase is that Alpine’s projected 2023 throughput is less than the throughput underlying Alpine’s existing rates.
